In 2010, the infamous "Quad incident" was the single most recent event to occur on our campus. No one who was there will ever forget that moment. It was a moment of hazing and racial insensitivity that left a bad taste in the mouths of many. In the immediate aftermath of the Quad incident, the Harvard student body, faculty, and administration came together to condemn the behavior of those involved and to take swift action to prevent a recurrence. The University established a committee to investigate the incident and to make recommendations for how the University could improve its policies and procedures. The committee's report called for a number of reforms, including the creation of a new Office of Diversity and Inclusion, the appointment of a new dean of student affairs, and the development of a new curriculum on diversity and inclusion. The University also took steps to ensure that all students, regardless of race, gender, religion, or sexual orientation, could feel safe and included on campus.
